The process of obtaining driver permission in Georgia is very similar to the process that continues in other states. If you pass the visual and written exams, you will be given a learner's permit, which must be held for one year before you can take the driving part of the exam. You must also complete a driver education course unless you are an adult over the age of 18. The most important factor in passing the written part of georgia's driving permit test is to study the official Georgia Drivers' Manual provided by the Georgia Department of Driving. Take the written exam The written part of the Georgia permit exam is called the knowledge test. The test focuses on knowing road rules and road signs. This information can be found in the driver's manual. The first thing to take a road rule test is to assess the driver's responsibilities, knowledge of the law and understanding of safe driving practices. The Road Rules section also has 20 multiple choice questions and three answer choices for each question. You must answer at least 15 of these questions correctly to get a passing score. The road sign test also consists of 20 multiple choice questions, asking you to identify specific signs, signals and markers, and must correctly answer at least 15 of these questions as well. Important research topics Knowledge tests only ask questions about road rules and road signs. Special attention should be paid to the drivers' manual section that describes this information. You'd better get used to the whole manual, but some sections are more important than others. The page numbers for the most important sections are: Traffic Law - PageSigns, signals and markings – Page 34 Safety Guidelines – Page 44 Share roads – Page 48 You can use learning tools such as notes and flashcards or ask a friend to quiz you to keep all the information provided in these sections. Teen Driver Resources Teen drivers must follow certain rules while driving with a learner's permit. For this reason, it is important that teenagers fully understand Joshua's laws, schooling requirements and driving restrictions. This information can be found on page 30 of the driver's manual and on the official website of Georgia DDS. Finally, you're also required to take a Georgia permit exam. In this exercise, you will have a general understanding of what questions are asked in the test and how they are explained.
